Hi, Bruce and Stephen. Most of my writing is in print journals and therefore not accessible online. However, I have links to a few stories and interviews below that you might be able to use (after the Wikipedia and Web site links):

Friday afternoon works fine for me, Bruce. In the meantime, I will select a short story for your web site.

Thanks again.

I'm so happy we've heard your podcast. We just talk about your life and work. It's pretty freewheeling; more like a conversation after dinner.

How's Friday afternoon for a talk? I have a thing with my son's school at lunch but should be back by 1:30 or 2:00.

Also, we'd like to put a sample of your writing on our web site--a short story or an excerpt of a novel that we could link to your other work.

Thanks,

Bruce

Hi, Bruce,

I'm flattered by your interest in my work -- and by your invitation. I would be thrilled by an interview, but I must tell you that a phone interview would work best for me. I am very flexible in terms of time.

I have listened to your podcasts, and I really like the informal discussion style and format you use with your guests. Do you give guests any of the topics/talking points you'll be discussing in advance?

As you must know already I am a West Monroe native, where I grew up in a rich heritage of "local color." Most of my fiction is set in northeast Louisiana -- including my new novella, From Tickfaw to Shongaloo.

Please let me know the details, and I look forward to the interview.

All best,

Dixon,

I recently became familiar with your work. I'm the co-host of the Louisiana Anthology Podcast, and I was wondering if you'd be available to do an interview. If you're in the Monroe area, we could meet up somewhere -- we're based in Ruston. Otherwise, we can do a phone interview.
